Rehearsing "Le Voyageur"

Rehearsals for the French play Voyageur," which will be presented by an all-society cast at the residence of Mrs. Franklin MacVengh in the Avenue of the Presidents, Monday afternoon, for the benefit of the Washington Diet Kitchthe benefit of the Washington Diet Kitchen, are being held daily. Those in the cast are Viscountess Benoist d'Azy, Countess de Bertier, Baron de Nagell, Baron de Freudenthal, and Mr. Wilhelm vom Rath.

The motif of the one-act play is: A traveler returns after five year's absense in Central America and goes to visit his married cousin, who, in the past had refused to marry him. He is informed by her maid that his cousin has lost her husband some eighteen months before On hearing that, he starts to leave just as the young widow enters the room. A On hearing that, he starts to leave just as the young widow enters the room. A very clever dialogue ensues between the traveler and his former sweetheart which is interrupted by the entrance of two other suitors for the young widow's hand. Then ensues a triangular duel of words, and only just before the drop of the curtain does the widow indicate which suitor has won her heart.

The play will be preceded by a teat dance of two of the widow indicates almost through the entire opera. In every detail and as a whole it was without the least flaw and must have satisfied the most flaw and the fine intelligence with which the orchestra responded to his direction.

Nothing finer in the way of orchestral work has been heard here in a long time than the expressive playing of the love motif which dominates the entire first act and runs with entrancing variations almost through the suitor has work has been heard here in a long time than the expressive playing of the love motif which dominates the entire first act and runs with entrancing variations almost through the suitor has work has been heard here in a long time than the expressive playing of the love motif which dominates the entire first act and runs with entrancing variations.

TRIALS OF LETTER CARRIERS

Today is St. Valentine's Day,
All in the morning bettere,
And I, a maid at your window,
To be your Valentine.

If William Shakespeare, scratching off his Hamlet with a quill some day back in the pages of matory, had suspected that the above ever would be used to introduce in a newspaper an announcement of St. Valentine's Day he probably would have applied for a perpetual copyright or blue-penciled the whole thing then and there.

That "All in the morning betime" still holds good, too, but if William had known that the youth of today generally roosts on about the ninth story of an apartment house he certainly would have discarded his poetic inclination and tossed that "And I, a maid at your window, to be your Valentine," into the waste paper basket.

A maid at her Valentine's window today, in sooth, probably would be frozen on the fire escape landing ere she awakened her boy-love. Shakespeare, who had a fondness for the romantic, never would have placed an amorous who had a followess for the rogardine never would have placed an amorous maiden on a fire escape, especially in such cold weather as prevails hereabouts, and therefore it is safe to assume he did not suspect later-day newspaper usage of his verses.
